Main findings and results

Alexander Arkadyevich Feinberg was born on November 2, 1939 in Tashkent, where his parents moved from Novosibirsk in 1937. After graduating from the seven-year school, Alexander Feinberg enrolled in the Tashkent Topographic College. After graduating from college, he served in the army in Tajikistan. Then he graduated from Tashkent University, where he studied at the correspondence department of Journalism of the Faculty of Philology, and worked in a student newspaper. In 1961, he married I. G. Koval. A. A. Feinberg was a member of the Writers' Union of Uzbekistan.

He was the author of fifteen books of poetry (including a posthumously published two-volume book compiled by the author), as well as four full-length feature films and more than twenty animated films based on his scripts. He translated poems and poems by Alisher Navoi and many modern Uzbek poets into Russian. His poems were published in the magazines "Smena", "Yunost", "New World", "Star of the East", "New Volga" and in periodicals of foreign countries: the USA, Canada and Israel. In 1999, on the twentieth anniversary of the tragic death of the Pakhtakor football team in a plane crash, the film "Their Stadium in Heaven" was shot according to his script, in which a song based on the words of Alexander Feinberg about the Pakhtakor people of 1979 sounds. For several years, A. A. Feinberg led a seminar of young writers of Uzbekistan in Tashkent.

Russian President Alexander Feinberg awarded the Pushkin Medal in 2009 for his great contribution to the development of cultural ties and the preservation of the Russian language and Russian culture. Alexander Arkadyevich Feinberg died on October 14, 2009 in Tashkent.
