Learning English at schools is crucial in today's globalized world for several reasons:

English is the language of international communication: Although English is not the most spoken language in the world; it is the official language of 53 countries and is spoken as a mother tongue by approximately 400 million people worldwide. However, that's not all, it's also the most spoken second language in the world.

According to the British Council, by 2020, about two billion people in the world will learn English. Therefore, it is very likely that if you meet someone from another country, you will both be able to speak English. It gives you an open door to the world and helps you connect with the citizens of the world. In areas such as business, science, and technology, English serves as the primary language for international communication.

Proficiency in English facilitates effective communication with individuals who speak diverse languages. Mastery of English also creates avenues for collaboration and networking with global professionals. This proficiency enables the exchange of ideas, knowledge, and expertise, fostering innovation and advancement across multiple industries. In the present globalized landscape, the capacity to communicate proficiently in English represents a valuable skill that significantly enhances career opportunities and personal growth.

Access to Information: English is the primary language used for a large quantity of information found online, in scholarly publications, and in international media. Students who are proficient in English have greater access to educational and informational resources. Students who are not proficient in English may face barriers in accessing the same resources, which can impact their academic and professional opportunities. Therefore, it is important for educational institutions to provide support and resources for students to improve their English language skills. This can include English language classes, tutoring, and access to language learning software. By addressing these barriers, educational institutions can ensure that all students have equal access to the information and resources they need to succeed.

Career Opportunities: Being able to communicate in English is beneficial for a job since many global corporations and international organizations utilize it as their primary or secondary language. Higher Education: English language fluency is sometimes required for entrance to universities and colleges, particularly for programs that teach the language or call for examinations like the TOEFL or IELTS.

Travel: English is widely spoken in many countries, making it easier for travelers to communicate and navigate through different regions. Whether for business or leisure, English proficiency can greatly enhance one's travel experience.

Technology and Innovation: Many technological advancements, research papers, and scientific publications are produced in English. Proficiency in the language can provide individuals with access to a wealth of knowledge and opportunities in the field of technology and innovation.

English provides more entertainment and access to the Internet Today, many films, television programs, books, and music are published and produced in English. Once you understand English, you no longer need to rely on translations and subtitles. By using these media, you will also constantly develop your English listening and reading skills.

The language of the Internet is currently English. About 565 million people use the Internet every day, and about 52% of the world's most visited websites are in English. Therefore, learning this language gives access to more than half of the content on the Internet, which may not be available otherwise. If you understand English, you can exchange information with more people on the Internet and use much more material, whether for fun or for work.

English makes traveling easier. As emphasized before, since English is spoken as a first language in 53 countries and as a second language in more than 118 countries, learning the language is easier to travel anywhere. In fact, airport announcements, train schedules, emergency information and street signs are often available in English, even in countries where a different type of alphabet is used as the first language. Undoubtedly, if you travel to a country where you do not speak the language, you will almost certainly find someone who understands at least a little English.

English proficiency can also open up opportunities for cultural exchange and deeper connections with locals. Many people around the world are eager to practice their English skills and engage in conversations with native or fluent speakers. This can lead to rich and meaningful interactions, allowing travelers to gain insights into different perspectives and ways of life. Whether it is ordering a meal at a local restaurant or seeking directions from a passerby, the ability to communicate in English can greatly enhance the overall travel experience.

Cultural exchange: English is a gateway to understanding and appreciating different cultures, literature and art around the world. This gives students the opportunity to explore different perspectives and ideas. Global Citizenship: Learning English promotes understanding of global problems and promotes global citizenship because it enables students to participate in international dialogues and understand global challenges and solutions.

English can make you "smarter". Learning a foreign language improves your cognitive and analytical skills. Learning a new language can be difficult and requires a lot of mental practice. According to a 2012 Swiss study, learning a new language changes brain structures and affects the parts of the brain responsible for memory, conscious thinking, and can make you more creative. In the long term, bilingualism can keep the brain strong and healthy into old age and supports concentration and memory. On an individual level, it improves personality and increases self-esteem.

Simply put, learning a foreign language makes your brain stronger and more versatile. Learning English is not only useful, but also very rewarding, and your progress will make you feel great. Why not make it even more specific by taking a standardized test to demonstrate your ability! By taking a standardized test, you can showcase your language skills and receive official recognition of your proficiency. This can open up new opportunities for education, career advancement, and personal growth. So, why not challenge yourself and take your English learning journey to the next level? The benefits are endless, and the sense of achievement is priceless.

Personal Development: Acquiring knowledge of English fosters critical thinking, problem-solving techniques, and cognitive growth—all vital in the linked world of today. In conclusion, studying English in school is crucial for children to succeed in a worldwide world, access information, seek higher education, and interact with others from different backgrounds and viewpoints.
