

THE ROLE OF PARENTAL INVOLVEMENT IN EDUCATION

Muazzamkhon Yakhshibaeva Shavkat kizi

Trainee teacher of Urgench state pedagogical institute

Rakhmonova Asaloy Sherzodovna

Student of Urgench state pedagogical institute

Annotation: Parental involvement in their child's education will help children focus more on their studies, improves achievement, higher their self-esteem and self-confidence. This article will reveal how important for parents to participate in the education of their child during his or her schooling. As a result, students, being under the control of their parents, can achieve many goals and find the right path in their lives.

Key words: Parental involvement; the main role of parents; communication; literature; parent-teacher conference; supporting.

Introduction. What is the role of parental involvement in education? This is a role in which every adult must both emotionally and physically support their child. This is the parent's interest in the child's goals and interests. We will discuss four key areas in which parents can have a positive impact:

1. Communication with child
2. Parent-teacher conference
3. Reading and literature
4. Supporting

1. Communication with child.

Parents must communicate all the time, have discussions and learn about the interests of their children. When conducting a discussion with a child, children learn: the rules of communication, not to interrupt others, and to listen carefully. This lays the foundation for self-esteem and self-confidence, and enables the child to boldly come up with ideas. When communicating with a child, parents should not raise their voices, they should behave calmly, at this time the child will feel needed, successful and will strive for his goal. Adults should pay attention to how well their child does homework and encourage them, as well as support their joy, then they will see the parent's reaction, after which the child will have a reason to be proud of himself.

2. Parent-teacher collaboration.

The interaction of the teacher with the parents of students is aimed at creating a unified educational space. The activities of parents and teachers in the interests of the child are successful only if they become allies. Parental involvement promotes positive behavior and discipline among children. When parents actively communicate with teachers, they work together to address any behavioral issues promptly. Consistent support from both home and school ensures that children understand the importance of good behavior. Also, every parent should participate in parent-teacher meetings to be aware of the achievements and mistakes of their children; in addition, and gain insights from teachers. To help the teacher the parent should create a structured routine for studying, provide necessary resources, and designate a quiet space for homework and learning activities.

3. Reading and Literature.

Art and literature develop memory, thinking, fantasy, imagination and creativity. A parent should get into the habit of reading books, going to different libraries together in order to develop their child's horizons. The atmosphere in the library can increase interest and love for books. After reading, the books should discuss with them and get their opinions. Parents need to ask the child what he remembers most, which of the characters he liked or did not like, and whether he approves of the ending of the story. After all, a culture of reading involves not just reading a text, but also the ability to analyze it. The child should see parents who read, and read with interest. They need to arrange books and magazines so that they are easy to find. Let them be available everywhere. If a child grows up surrounded by books and sees that his parents are book lovers, he will be curious and interested in experiencing this for himself. When a child is surrounded by many books and magazines, he will naturally be predisposed to reading books. If a child makes mistakes when reading, parents should correct him, but this must be done very gently. The best ways are books with bright pictures, large letters and a fascinating plot.

4. Supporting.

Parental support plays an important role in a child's development, especially supporting their interests in learning. Parents can support them with words as well as actions. When they begin to reward their child with his favorite things, such as buying his favorite chocolate or taking him to a place that interests him, then they begin to work even harder on themselves.

Especially when choosing a future profession, every child wants help with this. During this period of life, the role of a parent is very important, on such days they should pay attention to their interests and help them choose the right direction. Also, parents can send their children to different clubs in which they can understand what they need and what they do not. Children want their choices to be respected at all times, so parents should never judge their child's choices. The parent should allow the child to start from scratch, based on the fact that he believes in him, in his ability to succeed, due to the reason that seeing this increases the child's self-confidence. Support can be shown through touch, such as patting their shoulder, hugging, and you can lift the child's chin. At such a moment they will feel real support from their closest person.

Conclusion

To conclude, I want to say that parental involvement is an important aspect of a child's educational journey. By actively participating in their child's education, parents provide support, motivation, and guidance that significantly impact academic achievement, behavior, and overall well-being. It is crucial for parents to establish a positive and nurturing environment at home that complements the learning happening at school. Through such collaboration between parents, teachers, and schools, children are more likely to become successful learners and reach their full potential.

Reference

1. <https://brainyvista.top>
2. <https://www.wikipedia.org>
3. <http://researchgate.net.com>
4. "Psychology" L.A.Venger, B.S.Mukhina