Today, one of the most significant issues in methodological research is still how to teach foreign languages. This is understandable given that the current social structure of society pushes the responsibility of fostering children's spiritual growth, expanding the humanistic content of education, and more fully realizing the subject's developmental potential as it relates to each child's unique personality. As a result, the primary objective of teaching foreign languages in high school is to help students build the kind of personality that would enable them to engage in international conversation and work on their learned skills on their own. Nowadays, the study of foreign languages has become very popular among young people, and it has also risen to the level of

Public Policy. Many conditions are being created for the training of many experienced specialists for teaching foreign languages. And foreign languages deliberately useful to teach from young children studying in preschool institutions.

Learning foreign languages has risen to the demand of the Times, and many young students are passionate about learning languages. Of course language learning is good but teaching foreign languages to children studying in preschool educational institutions is considered much more difficult and many methods have been developed on it. You can see some of them below:

1. Work with visual aids, posters and books.

When teaching foreign languages in kindergartens, it is a little difficult to create that foreign environment, so the use of various visual aids, posters, toys and various videos and songs adapted to children in teaching languages effectively benefits their imagination of that environment. Take English as an example, in the process of teaching this language, it is more effective for the child to use the equipment in the room in the process of memorizing words. It is easier to memorize the English translation of the items that we have always seen and that surround us. The use of books filled with various interesting images and colorful letters increases children's enthusiasm for learning. Because these children do not yet fully know how to read and write in their own language. Therefore, the application of picture books in education is one of the best techniques.

2. Using singing and action games to improve the classroom environment.

It is a sentence in which we get bored by constantly memorizing children, teaching them some word, and losing their motivation for learning. For this reason, it is necessary to use action songs and action games to distract them and make them interested in teaching. At the same time, the educator must also take an active part in these processes, move children in a childish way next to him. Because the more the educator can interest them, the better the result can be achieved in children. Because in any education, both the process and the result are important. Creating a flexible classroom atmosphere is sometimes more important than any learning method. At the beginning of class in the classroom, all the children, led by a teacher with a pleasant English song, sang together and dance a little to match his tone. This will help to temper their bodies in itself, become more refreshed and memorize the lyrics of the song faster. The English environment, importantly, allows you to naturally enter a good learning atmosphere. Children's self-control skills are slow, and it is difficult for them to concentrate and occupy their attention throughout the entire training session. Therefore, the teacher must present songs that children love to listen to, poems or quick sayings to temper the language, or an animated cartoon that children love when I am not. Naturally, children will not be able to understand all the words in cartoons, but by watching the heroes of my cartoon, they will be able to understand what they are saying.

3. The value of making motions in the classroom

When words are spoken with facial expressions, such as gestures, children comprehend them better. Teachers that utilize facial movements to provide instructions, encourage students, or emphasize the importance of what they are explaining to them find that children quickly grasp this. This approach is crucial for English.

4. Using puzzle games to integrate knowledge

Knowledge is strengthened by repetition. And completing puzzle games is undoubtedly entertaining and useful. When playing puzzle games, mistakes are frequently made, but kids should be made to speak out when they do. Because making mistakes and attempting to repair them might help children become more flexible and enthusiastic. Additionally, this has an impact on the child's future. It results in the realization that he is himself, unafraid of making blunders when speaking a foreign language. Naturally, this has a significant impact on instructional processes.

As a conclusion, we may state how crucial it is to start learning a language early. Our grandparents used to say, "Knowledge learned in childhood is like a pattern engraved into a stone." In reality, encouraging children's curiosity about the globe and its peoples from a young age is one of our most important jobs because it boosts their possibilities of entering foreign countries through their knowledge of foreign languages. mostly because young people have the key to our future. Experienced educators and scientists from all around the world have created and implemented a variety of efficient teaching methods and strategies. Several of them have already been taken into account. These procedures are regarded as the most widely used on Kinder garden, sadly, is illegal in our state. These techniques are not known by all parents and caregivers for M. Through this post, we will present the audience to these strategies. Significant steps are being taken to advance education in our nation.
