France. Although France is considered the homeland of the etiquette, it is different it is not given as much attention as in other countries. For several centuries in France, "the way a Frenchman behaves this is etiquette" is maintained. Farang language - world and diplomacy language. In this regard, according to the French, nothing has changed. Unlike other countries, the French believe that foreigners not only know their language, but they consider it necessary that they should know very well. In France, they shake hands regardless of how well they know each other greeting has become a necessary habit. Twice with the same person in one day, as if it was the first time with this person. As you can see, shaking hands is a sign of disrespect. During the conversation, the French interrupt each other's words. This thing is not recognized as a sign of lack of education, but on the contrary, interlocutors means that they are listening attentively and are highly interested in the conversation shows that they want to express their thoughts as soon as possible. Possible situations in the conversation of other nationalities for the French may be a sign of lack of education. The French are good at using their hands during a conversation they see. They convey their thoughts more clearly with the help of their hands. The inner world of the interlocutor, the intellectual, from the movements of the hands of the French can know about the level and inner feelings. They use hand gestures for all situations in life: something when you don't like something, when you are unsure, when you ask for forgiveness, when you are surprised, when he loses himself and misses.

Great Britain. The main qualities of the English include self-control, Don't finish what you want to say to the interlocutor the ability to keep problems inside, not being open enough, valuing property, independent features. When exchanging ideas, the English are calm - respect for the interlocutor sign. During the conversation, English people avoid strict phrases and say "I think", they use phrases like "in my opinion", "I think". Listen to the interlocutor's speech without any negation, agree with what is being said Not to mention, not at all. According to the English, you should behave yourself in all life events knowledge is the main virtue of man. Discussions are usually short about the weather or the world and the country, starts with sports news reports. Talking about the weather For English people, it is not only the most convenient topic for conversation, but also the main one to switch to the topic or the gaps that appear during the conversation helps to fill. When seen in England, women kiss their hands and everyone is present "What a beautiful dress!" or "What a great cake!" such praises are very inappropriate is considered It is impossible to build separate conversations around the table. Everyone is sitting to listen to the speaker and the speaker, in turn, to make the speech audible to others it is necessary to conduct.

Germany. Respect, good manners, politeness and modesty in Germany style of dress, compliance with formalities in appeals, accuracy and business sense Germans know their respect and Germany is Europe they always remember that it is their heart. It is accepted to mention rank and surnames while being treated. It is important to mention the title of each person in the transaction. If the title if it is unknown, you can address it as "Mr. Doctor". A person who is older or has a higher position in Germany if it is not agreed with the initiative, it is recommended to address as "you". not done. Handshakes are common, even short-term It is also widely used when saying goodbye. Women expressed their desire to lend a hand it is recommended to wait until Usually, go with everyone who is invited greeting is common. The exception is cases where a large number of people are invited constitutes In the restaurant, with invited guests, even unknown persons They are greeted with phrases that mean "bon appetit". Before consuming a drink, the glass is raised and the host's glass (but, for example, in France, a glass is raised, but not hit).

United States of America. In America, his opinion is direct It is acceptable to communicate as openly as possible. What are Americans themselves? when they think about it, they always talk about it. Deep meaning, exaggeration in the language common in other nations misleads Americans: they take every sentence verbatim accept what you do not understand, making sure that it is clear who are used to not doing it. The most important thing for Americans is individuality and personal rights. At the same time, one of their characteristics is correct speech and sincerity. Americans like to dress simply and comfortably, casually and informally communication and democratic between leaders and workers in enterprises they prefer to have a relationship. Americans are healthy, active, self-confident, and resourceful they try to pretend to be. They save time and value punctuality. Way to stay up late there is no excuse for staying late. They are in negotiations they quickly go to the main goal and do not like to spend time on formalities. Negotiations are short-term, face-to-face, and professional will be focused on striving towards the goal.

Japan. Japan always has its traditional Japanese kindness and known for his politeness. In Japan, young and old speak in low voices. Although the Japanese are not warm, they are very polite people are considered The rules of politeness and etiquette for the Japanese are almos is sacred. Explaining the meaning of Japanese etiquette begins with its principles. In the Japanese family library, along with other literature, illustrated books on etiquette, practical for learning the laws of courtesy manuals can be found. New in offices and government institutions to what extent the employee knows the rules of etiquette before hiring him they check. Japanese etiquette is how a person behaves at home, on the street, at work defines the need to know. The Japanese know how to pass tea, how to dress, they must know how to use headgear. In contrast to European etiquette, according to the rules of Japanese etiquette, from the stairs while moving, a man is standing on the left side, climbing the stairswhen the man is before the woman, and when he is going down the stairs, the man is the man should be behind. The Japanese are polite and reserved people. For them Like other nations of the world, etiquette is very important. The Japanese are theirs to them, although they do not consider it obligatory for others to follow their traditions they treat those who comply with it with sincere gratitude. Because the bowing tradition is still common in Japan Guests are encouraged to bow their heads in response.

China. A special approach to traditions, order, established rules and adherence to traditions became the basis of his teaching of behavior and manners. At present, Confucian conditions and relations between people serious vertical system left behind. Handling, principles of behavior, clothing its conditions have lost the color of strictness, regardless of the social hierarchy. Women got the same privileges as men. At the same time, to adults feelings of respect and attention to national culture, history, and literature are preserved left It should be remembered that the main feature of etiquette in China is courtesy. In China, when dealing with older people or strangers, "you". communication is rarely used compared to European countries. the chinese mainly when communicating, they are addressed as "you", which, in turn,is a complete analogue of the Russian or, for example, the French personal pronoun does not count.

In communication, a person is respectful towards the other person instead of the personal pronoun - Mr. (Mrs.) and adding the last name possible

Arab countries. Arabic etiquette is an unwritten tradition of the Arab world It is considered an integral part of the laws and must be followed. Arabs to this day they have been observing Arab etiquette in all spheres of society.
